

Overview Ancient examples Types North America Britain India A porch (from Old French porche; from Latin porticus "colonnade", from porta "passage") is a room or gallery located in front of an entrance to a building. A porch is placed in front of the facade of a building it commands, and forms a low front. Alternatively, it may be a vestibule (a small room leading into a larger space) or a projecting building that houses the entrance door of a building.
